That Time Again Fall Quarter In Auburn

By Kaye Lovvorn

It happens every year. One day it's summer and then cars loaded with clothes, grandmother's chocolate chip cookies, clock radios, and, in recent years, dozens of plants, begin streaming down the highways leading into Auburn. And suddenly it's fall.

This year university officials anxiously waited to see if the increased tuition and fees would have an effect on Auburn's enrollment. While other colleges have been shining up their recruitment techniques during the past five years, Auburn keeps turning students away. Although all the data has yet to be compiled, the basic figures are in—and Auburn's enrollment continues to grow. It's up another 200 students this fall.

"That just goes to show that when you've got a quality product, people will buy it," said Auburn President Hanly Funderburk. Apparently the tuition increase has had no effect on Auburn enrollment, although Dr. Funderburk says so far details aren't complete enough to tell how out-of-state enrollment has been affected.

Out-of-state tuition increased $280 per quarter this fall. And in an effort to bring Auburn's out-of-state enrollment more in line based on state appropriations, out-of-state freshman admissions for fall quarter were limited last spring. (Currently Auburn is accepting applications for both in-state and out-of-state students for all quarters of 1982. Alabamians and children of alumni will continue to have an advantage, however.)

Once the students got to campus this fall, they found, as always, some changes awaiting them, such as the lighting and landscaping of the campus area east of Haley Center concourse. Some had to find a new place to live as Alumni Hall and Dorm 12 are no longer the provinces of women. Instead, men students now occupy both, with engineering students living in Dorm 12.

On the administrative level, President Funderburk expanded his executive council during the summer to include faculty representatives from both Auburn and AUM as well as the vice president for academic affairs and the vice president for research and dean of the graduate school.

"After considering several alternatives and listening to numerous suggestions from faculty and staff," President Funderburk increased the council, saying it is now "more representative of all segments of the university."

The new executive council, which held its first meeting September 16, includes James O. Williams, AUM chancellor; J. Grady Cox, executive vice president; John W. Kuykendall, Auburn faculty senate chairman; Robert Gaines, AUM faculty president; Taylor D. Littleton, vice president for academic affairs; Paul F. Parks, vice president for research and dean of the Graduate School; Stanley P. Wilson, vice president for agriculture, home economics, and veterinary medicine; George L. Bradberry, Alumni executive director and director of development; Pat Dye, athletic director; Grover T. Jacobs, financial advisor to the president; and Dan Holsenbeck, university relations director.

Other changes occured on administrative levels. Dr. Lauren G. Wolfe is new head of the Department of Pathology and Parasitology in the School of Veterinary Medicine, replacing Dr. Aaron Groth who has returned to teaching and research. John F. Carney, III, is the new head of civil engineering, replacing Raymond Moore, who had been acting head of the department for the past year. In addition, Dr. Jack W. Rogers, professor of mathematics, is currently acting head of his department while Math Head Ben Fitzpatrick spends a year as a visiting professor in England.

Students are also missing some other familiar faces now gone from accustomed places. After thirty years, security chief Millard Dawson retired at the end of the summer. His replacement is Jack Walton, a former member of both the Auburn Police Department and the Lee County Sheriff's Department who had been with Alabama Department of Corrections since 1977.

Dean of Agriculture R. Dennis Rouse also retired at the end of August. Dr. Robert A. Voitle will become the new Auburn Agriculture dean at the beginning of winter quarter. He is currently head of the department of poultry industry at California Polytechnic State University after teaching at the University of Florida and the University of Tennessee.

Students in the humanities—especially graduate students—are missing an ally in the library this quarter. Dr. Ruth G. Fourier, head of the Humanities Division of Ralph Brown Draughon Library, retired September 30 after 19 years of helping Auburn students track down esoteric infor-

FRESHMAN PICNIC—President Hanly Funderburk greeted hundreds of new Auburn freshmen at the annual picnic on the president's lawn this fall. Along with the music and the food, the new students got a few words of advice from the president about taking advantage of all the academic opportunities they'll find at Auburn.

Second Aubie Calendar to Be Released

By Mark Almond '82

Though birds and cats have traditionally been regarded as mortal enemies, an immediate friendship grew between Aubie the tiger and Tiger the eagle as they posed for the cover of the 1982 Aubie calendar.

In the past, some animals have been frightened by the tiger costume—a fact on the minds of the calendar's planners.

"Last year we tried a shot of Aubie with a girl on horseback," said photographer Will Dickey. "But when the horse saw the Aubie costume it freaked out and threw the girl

But no mishap occurred this year as the eagle posed with the oversized cat.

The meeting of the mascots is one of 13 scenes depicted in the calendar. Among others are: Aubie getting a parking ticket from campus security, Aubie the WEGL disc jockey, a late night "cram session" for final exams, and Aubie as the winner of the ODK cake race.

This is the second Aubie calendar produced by the SGA. The profits from last year's calendar were used to buy a new Aubie costume, pay the expenses of Aubie's travels and skits, and to buy shakers for basketball games, according to SGA president Rip Britton.

Profits from this year's edition will be used for spirit projects such as basketball

The calendar's theme is "At Home on the Plains.

We're trying to depict little things around campus that students will enjoy and alumni will be able to relate to," said production manager Kathy Saal, a junior from Fort Lauderdale.

Each month of 1982 will include a color photograph of Aubie posing with several students. "We're trying to include many different people from different areas and groups on campus," said Britton.

Dickey finds photographing Aubie a creative challenge. "You can make Aubie look debonair by shooting him from the side," he said. "Or you can make him laugh by letting him throw his head back, look serious by looking at the camera with his head down. You can get all kinds of expressions. You can brush his mane out real wild or slick it back to make him look dashing.

But you never have to worry that his eyes will be closed in the shot," he added.

Dickey is a 1978 graduate of Auburn. While a student he served as the photo editor of The Glomerata and The Auburn Plainsman. Since graduation he has worked for University Relations and The Auburn Bulletin. He also has done extensive free-

Posing a scene takes a lot of planning and equipment. An example is the photograph of Aubie the radio announcer. WEGL, the campus radio station, was transformed into a photographic studio. Electronic flash units were set up, posters, albums and other props were positioned, clothes were selected for the models, and exposures calculated.

"It gets hot in the suit because you have to sit there while everything is being set up," said Danny Richards, a senior from Dothan, the occupant of the Aubie costume. "But when the girls posing with me look up and say 'You're so cute' it makes it all worth it."

The calendar is scheduled to be released at the Nov. 7 homecoming game. It will sell for $3.

'We're going to market it a lot better this year," says Kathy. "We're going to have newspaper ads. The printer is using one of our color separations in his ad in the football program and announcements will be made at football games with Aubie possibly doing a skit."

The SGA is trying to get the Greek organizations to help sell the calendars. 'We're trying to get the spirit committee to award spirit points to the fraternities and sororities that sell the most calendars," said Rip Britton.

Many students were involved in the production of the calendar. In addition to Britton, Saal, and Dickey, Harold Hamilton, a sophomore from Rogersville, Bob Harris, and Bill Prather, both seniors from Atlanta, assisted. Pam Morris, an artist from University Relations, provided technical advice.

Lack Security As Readers, Writers

By Sam Hendrix

Readers of academic scholarship winners' personality profiles printed in recent Alumnews issues might have noticed an opinion shared by many of the new freshmen: a disillusionment with English.

"I enjoy math and science, but dislike English," wrote one scholarship winner. "Literature drives me crazy," said another. "English doesn't interest me," said a third.

One cannot realistically fault these young people for their lack of enthusiasm toward reading, but one must wonder why so many bright college-bound students do not care for the science of words or the study of literature.

"This is very unfortunate," says Dr. Harry M. Solomon, director of freshman English at Auburn. "This widespread circumstance is explainable partly because many people are insecure about their language skills and partly because of the complexity of reading and writing."

Many people feel they do not read as fast or spell as accurately as others, Dr. Solomon says, and therefore have not developed a sense of security as a reader or a writer. "Because people spend time doing what they feel most comfortable doing, literature is toward the bottom of many people's priority lists."

Also, Dr. Solomon notes that reading and writing are probably the most complex human skills and that mastery of these skills occurs slower than mastery of related skills. "Particularly in a culture which values quick accomplishment and moves at an electronic pace, tasks that take great time and energy are frequently frustrating," Dr. Solomon said.

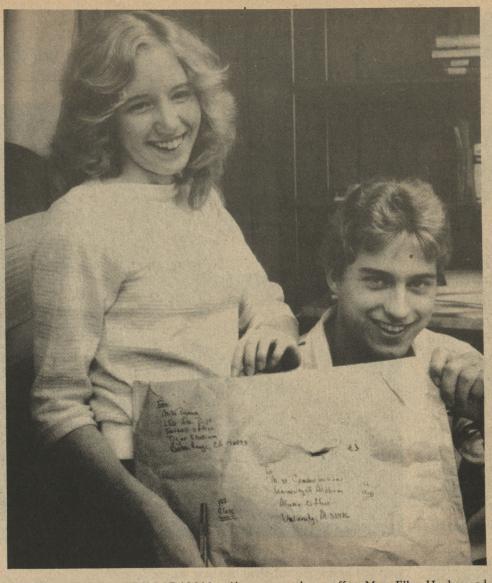

One of the problems stems from a common misunderstanding of the purpose of English classes. "Students, particularly in high school, equate English teachers with language police," Dr. Solomon said. "It's the same as teaching tennis by making students memorize a rule book rather than by coaching actions. This is not the way it should be."

That is often the way it is, however, because of over-crowded classes. As discussion of literary work involves a person's complete analytical faculties, the crowded classroom takes away from the individual attention an instructor can give. This situation, according to Dr. Solomon, leads to mutual frustration as the student feels the instructor demands too much, and the instructor feels students do not reach their potential.

Of course, over-crowded classrooms are only partially to blame for today's students' lack of interest in English. Dr. Solomon believes today's students generally lack intellectual discipline.

"SAT and ACT scores have been decreasing for 10 years now." Dr. Solomon said. "Students' attention spans have been shortened by television and their analytical and critical faculties dulled by loud music which includes often irrational and emotionally inspired lyrics not found in literature. This has led to a general lack of intellectual discipline."

Auburn's freshman English program, outlined by Dr. Solomon and Dr. Dennis Rygiel, also of the AU English Department, is designed to improve a student's reading and writing skills in preparation for further college work. Three cumulative courses, one in each of a student's first three quarters, form freshman composition at Auburn.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ALABAMA?—Alumnews student staffers Mary Ellen Hughes and Randy McRae show off a package which arrived in the Auburn Alumni Association's mail on October 1. Look closely at the picture we made before sending the package on its way and you'll see that it's addressed to a member of the staff at the "Alumni Office, University of Alabama, University, Al 35486." A favorite bumper sticker around town reads "Auburn—THE University of Alabama." Either the post office has developed a sense of humor, or bumper sticker propaganda is subtly paying off.

"We have a systematic approach to the development of these skills," Dr. Solomon explained. "The first course, 101, deals primarily with explanation. Writing assignments which require definition or comparing and contrasting call for a student to explain something. The second course, 102, proceeds to argumentation, and 103 moves toward evaluation of written works."

Auburn's freshman English program is more systematic than similar programs at other universities, where freshman English courses frequently amount to little more than grammar reviews. As Dr. Solomon says, "We presuppose a student has developed grammar skills by the time he is admitted to Auburn. I feel strongly that we need this presupposition in order to progress students when they enroll here.

"But our attitude is not sink or swim," he quickly added. "I'm realistic enough to know that all freshmen who come here have not developed these skills sufficiently. These people should be given a chance to do well with their college work, too."

Consequently Auburn's English Department sponsors, at no charge to students, a writing laboratory in room 3183 Haley Center daily except for Friday afternoons.

"Auburn is a large enough university to have diversified resources to take care of all kinds of students," Dr. Solomon said. "Our writing center is one of these resources. We have expert tutors, faculty members who spend two hours per week in addition to regular office hours, plus we have a hotline (826-5749) for anyone with questions concerning writing or grammar."

A Pre-College Reading List

by Sam Hendrix

No, Auburn University English faculty members do not expect students to have read each work on the recommended reading list prior to the students' enrolling in Auburn.

"There's not a freshman alive who has read all of that," allows Dr. Harry M. Solomon, director of freshman English at Auburn. "I'm sure there are not many professors who have read everything on that list."

The list was developed by Auburn's Freshman English Committee and revised last year. According to Dr. Solomon, the works are a general suggestion of what types of novels, short stories, poetry, and drama a student should have been reading in preparation for college.

"The list was developed to show students what works they should have been reading while in high school and the sort of works they may expect to encounter in college," Dr. Solomon said.

Alumni with children who will be coming to Auburn in 1982 or in the near future may want to clip this list of books for freshman reading recommended by Auburn's Freshman English Committee. The committee also stresses that the list is a good one for general reading or rereading.

Here and There

A Chinaberry Song

By Jerry Roden, Jr., '46

It seems only fair to warn at the outset that I have not the vaguest notion of where this column will go. For the first time in my many years of attempting to write, I am trying dictation—not because here in my old age I have become enamored of new-fangled methods, but because I have been temporarily deprived of the full use of my right hand. Even though I type with the touch system and have had stenographers and, upon occasion, dictating machines available, I have never been able to bring myself to write an Roden able to bring myself to write an editorial, an informal essay, or a poem with anything other than my gnarled right hand, a pen or pencil, and a piece of scratch paper.

Way back in a fiction seminar under Dr. Walton R. Patrick, we had a fascinating discussion about the effect of dictation on the style of Henry James, who, as I remember it, dictated all those complex novels while pacing the floor. Now I must confess that when I started this column, I had a certain faint but clear hope that dictation might give my writing a touch of the Jamesian quality. But it is already evident that that hope will not be realized—perhaps because the mishap that has me caressing my right hand and arm with my left has also deprived me temporarily of any balanced pacing ability, but more likely because I lack something above the shoulders that Henry James possessed in abundance.

Since I can provide no deep philosophical and psychological insights, I suppose that I should proceed as directly as possible to explaining the precise cause of my temporary debility: I collided head on with a chinaberry tree exactly six hours and 35 minutes ago. Fortunately for the chinaberry tree, one-half—more or less—of a automobile cushioned it from the impact of my hard head, right shoulder, and flying knees. However, I cannot hold that tree completely blameless, for it refused absolutely to budge the necessary one and one-half feet when a jammed accelerator sent my young driver friend flying in its direction.

My young friend and I have the assurance of an attractive feminine doctor at the emergency room of Lee County Hospital that we will survive the impact without lasting scars, the mechanics haven't been quite as reassuring about my automobile, but the chinaberry tree suffered no more than a slightly skinned knee and still stands unmoved and stubborn at the corner of 4th Avenue and 16th Place in Opelika.

Somehow I keep thinking that somewhere in the midst of my memories of squealing tires, a sudden crash, flashing blue and red lights, and a hundred or more sympathetic faces, that there must be a moral, but for some reason with only my left hand operable, I can't put my finger on it. However, whatever that moral may be, a chinaberry tree undoubtedly stands in its center.

On the surface of things, a chinaberry tree appears rather attractive in the spring, a source of delight for children in the fall, and rather harmless at all times, but somewhere in the midst of every chinaberry tree broods a dark and malevolent spirit intent upon breeding some mischief in the world. Chinaberry trees spring up in the most undesirable places, and branches pop off just at the moment that you are swinging with carefree delight, and the trees die and fall at the most inopportune moments. Early on in A Place to Come To, Robert Penn Warren describes the crunch of chinaberries under the feet of mountaineers tramping into a home to pay their last respects to a comrade who had died violently. Warren seemed to understand the precise significance of chinaberry trees, but like a good artist, he left the issue enshrouded by a faint veil of mystery.

Perhaps some day when my right hand can again pick up a pen and think for me, I will penetrate the mystery in the heart of a chinaberry tree. However, at this moment, I can only conclude: Beware of chinaberry trees, beware of their inviting purple blossoms, beware of the delightful crunch of their fruit, beware of their enticing shade, and above all, beware of their unyielding trunks.

Behind The Headlines

By Kaye Lovvorn

One of the delights of working in the Auburn Alumni Association comes through the variety of Auburn Alumni one meets. Fall quarter is especially interesting because of the hundreds of former students who return to Auburn to celebrate their class reunions.

Another of the delights of the job is reading the mail. Information from some of our recent mail you'll find throughout this issue in the form of identifications and comments made on pictures we used earlier in the year. We'll be using more in later issues.

And heading the list of delights is meeting future Auburn alumni—especially those who become both our friends and an important part of The Auburn Alumnews.

We'd like to say thanks to some special staffers who've moved on to other things, celebrate one's return, and welcome some others to our particular form of chaos. Fortunately, we haven't actually had to say goodbye to anyone. Ruth Schowalter moved over to the eighth floor of Haley Center to become a graduate teaching assistant this fall, but she still drops by for lunch occasionally and has promised us some photographs for the next issue.

As you can tell from the bylines of this issue, Paula Wood '79 hasn't completely forsaken us. Although most of her time is spent teaching these days, she helps us survive and get the issue out each month.

Mary Myrick '83 spent the summer at home in Atlanta being her mother's right hand, but we're glad that its fall and she's back in Auburn to lend her considerable talents to The Alumnews.

Sam Hendrix joined us in September just in time to get in on all the layout and proofreading. This issue, his bylines cover everything from freshman English to football. Sam wrote sports for the Florence paper and co-edited the University of North Alabama student paper before moving to Auburn to become a graduate student in English and joining the Alumnews staff.

The newest member of our staff—so new that with deadlines we've scarcely had time to get to know her—is freshman Mary Ellen Hughes of Jacksonville, Fla.

Also listed on our masthead you'll find student interns Pete Mohney, who is back for a second quarter; Gayle Richards, a Mobilian looking forward to spending Thanksgiving in New York; and Randy McRae, who spent the summer at Walt Disney World. Alumnews readers can expect to see bylines by them all in the next issue.

Where Time Moves Slow

By Bob Sanders '52

Reprinted from The Auburn Bulletin

It was good to go to the country for a couple of days, back to the roots, to be among kith and kin for a few suspended moments.

There was some family business to be taken care of; but, more importantly, there was some visiting to be done. And some relaxing and overeating, and a wee bit of work that didn't really seem like work at all

Well, take the pea-picking for example. I woke up about 6:30 (I say "about" for reasons that will be explained later) and sneaked out of bed and into my jeans and out the back door and across the road to the pea patch. It was good, being there amongst the purple hulls, all by myself, picking away. It was nice and cool and the picking went fast, even though the inverted "U" position began to recall memories of endless hours in the cotton fields, and straightening up was worse.

But I had a bushel almost picked by the time brother Jack and his brood came straggling across the road to join in the picking.

Between them, they got another bushel or so picked in a hurry, and we were ready for the breakfast Mama announced was ready.

After stuffing ourselves with eggs and bacon and sausage and grits and biscuits and toast and various homemade jellies and preserves, some of us went out to the cool west-facing front porch to start in on the shelling while a couple of others took care of the dish washing.

Shelling peas in a companionable setting is not bad work. We shelled and rocked (or swung) and talked, and did some bird-watching, too. A couple of kingbirds used some of the pines in the front yard as their base as they darted out time after time to snatch unwary insects. Some woodpeckers (the ones who nested in the tall dead pine near the far end of the scuppernong vines, I suspect) hung around for a while, as did some mockingbirds and a brown thrasher and a cardinal, and a yellowish bird I never quite could identify, even though one of the younguns was sent on a high priority mission to find the binoculars.

We just sat and shelled and talked, and once in a while, Pat the pony would nicker from the pasture just past the driveway, begging for some of the apples that hung from the gnarled old Marshall tree just out of her reach, and somebody would be delegated to go feed her one or two. But she always wanted more. Shamelessly spoiled.

Then, while the womenfolk blanched and cooled and packaged and froze the peas, we menfolk, ranging down to an about-to-be first grader, got in the pickup and drove over to the watermelon patch where, even though it was past its prime, we were able to find several of those small, gray, delicious, yellow-meated melons, which were taken back to the house for later consumption.

One of the old apple trees had died, oh, a year or so ago, and a family decision was made that it should be removed. So Daddy's old power saw was tracked down and oiled up and fueled, and Jack, the mechanical one in the family, got all set to fell the deceased tree, which, after all, was right out there in the front yard, detracting considerably from the beauty thereof.

VJ DAY—Auburn students check out the headlines on a local magazine rack in August 1945.

Well, the saw was too little for the job in the first place. Plus, it was dull, and the tree had become practically petrified. Sparks would fly from it — and from the dirt, since we wanted to cut it low enough to mow over the stump.

It was like J.T. Holiday and the terraces that time. The machine was just too small for the job. But, hark, idea! I remembered that on the wall of the little shed by the smokehouse was the old crosscut saw. We got that out and got prepared. Lacking the proper lubricating device, a Coke bottle full of coal oil with green pine needles jammed in the mouth of the bottle as a spreading brush, we just doused some chain saw fuel on the rusty saw and got hunkered down into position.

It all came back in a hurry, the way we used to have to get out and cut wood for the stove and fireplace, and between huffing and puffing and relubricating and ruminating about how we were doing that when we were younger than some of the squirts watching us, and how we couldn't imagine in our wildest hallucinations them doing the kind of work we had to do at that age, we sawed away.

The old saw remembered the way. It, surprisingly, was still pretty sharp, and Jack didn't ride it the way he used to, a way that inspired some really creative remonstrations on my part, as I recall. Mercifully, he called for a break a time or two — I, by then, couldn't muster enough strength to speak — and finally, with some pushing from bystanders, the old tree came down

I demonstrated to the young watchers the proper method of putting the saw on the shoulder for transporting, feeling empty handed, though, that I didn't also have an ax, a sledge hammer, a wedge, the coal oil bottle, and a jug of water to complete the kit. We thought they might get involved in one of the old bull-leading deals, but cousin Tom's cows loaded onto the truck plumb docilely. No excitement at all.

The bed in the back bedroom (that used to be the kitchen and back porch before the remodeling) felt extra good that night. There was a cool breeze, and the beautiful sounds of thousands of night-talking insects permeated the half-moonlight.

Old Spike, Mama's big dog, would occasionally carry on a long distance conversation with a dog on the next ridge. But I didn't eavesdrop very long....

Ah, it was good to almost leave the world for a little while. For three days I didn't hear a radio. The TV was heard only in the background as the kids watched Captain Kangaroo or Bob Barker or some other kiddie show. A swift glance across the front of the Birmingham News showed that Mark Winne had the cleaning up of the state well in hand.

And since none of Mama's several clocks showed the time to be anywhere near the times of any of the others, and since my timepiece had also decided it was a time for rest, I never had the slightest idea what time it was, except daylight and dark — and time to eat, always time to eat, apples, pears, homemade ice cream, fresh okra and peas, and I don't know what all....There were a couple of books to be read.

And I didn't even care what time it was.

Jake's Joint As A Fraternity House

Dear Kaye,

It was a real pleasure to read Bob Sanders' article about Jake's Joint and the old house at the corner of Thach and Gay. It was a particular pleasure to me since I lived in the same house some 10 years before Bob.

In late 1941 or early 1942 Alpha Lambda Tau Fraternity (now Tau Kappa Epsilon) took over this house as their fraternity house, moving from a smaller house on West Glenn. I shared a corner room on the second floor with Evan Zeiger, now a vice-president of Samford University. There were several other two-and-three-man rooms on that floor.

On the top floor where Bob lived we had six people in one of the large rooms and either two or three in the small one. The other large room was used as our chapter room. By the way, we called it the fourth floor because that's what it was when viewed from the east.

In the basement was our dining room and kitchen just as they were some years later. The kitchen was presided over by our housemother-cum-dietitian, a Mrs. Nelson who came to us from Montgomery and who had some rather strict ideas regarding alcoholic beverages.

On the first floor, entered from Gay Street, was a large living room, a small den, the housemother's suite and I believe one two-man room. The living room, which stretched the entire length of the south side of the house had a number of french doors which opened onto a porch. It was not an unusual occurrence when we had parties or dances in the spring or fall for us to be joined by one or more couples who entered uninvited from the street. This was usually discovered the next morning when someone asked "who was that redhead last night?" Incidentally, Auburn Hall was Wittel Dormitory then, occupied by females, and the porch swing was an excellent observation point.

I'm sorry that I don't have a picture of Jake's Joint, but the 1943 Glomarata has, in the fraternity section, a picture of the house as it was when we occupied it.

Sincerely,

C.W. Horton '43 Demopolis, Ala.

A Vote for Name of War Eagles

Dear Sirs:

I also prefer the name "War Eagle" to "Tigers" and/or "Plainsmen" when referring to Auburn University. Many other schools use "Tigers," to the point of confusion. To me, "War Eagle" is unique and synonymous with Auburn.

With kind regards, Lamar Blalock, D.V.M. '43

JAKE'S JOIN'T—Ten years before roomers of Bob Sanders' ilk filled the rooms of the big house on the corner of Thach and Gay—a place known to Bob and his fellows as Jake's Joint because of the proximity of a nearby eatery by that name—members of Alpha Lambda Tau called it home. This is the house as it appeared in the Glom of 1943.

Story Brought Back Memories of Kipp

I just read the July-August, 1981 issue. The article by Trudy Cargile on Thomas Kipp was like finding an old friend. Thank you.

I had Professor Kipp at Middle Georgia College in 1969. He was one of those few people you never forget. In a life of wonderful memories, he was one of the major inspirations and causes of me and several others attending Auburn (instead of that trade school to the north). It is true that he was responsible for many transfers to A.U. I'll never forget that day Prof. Kipp and Dean Cox talked to us about A.U.

Even the long hours he made me stay in drafting lab are fond memories. Please extend a "hello, glad you're doing fine" for me to Prof. Kipp.

Football History: Line Divide Play

Dear Editor:

Clyde Bolton quotes Ray Johnson in the Nashville Tennessean on the occasion of the death of Mike Donahue in 1958 as saying that Donahue at Auburn, Heisman at Georgia Tech, and McGugin at Vanderbilt put Southern football on the map. On the same occasion, Bolton quotes Ed Danforth in the Atlanta Journal, as saying: "You were nobody until you had beaten Auburn. That was the place card for the head table."

These comments describe an era in Auburn athletics presided over by Mike Donahue as head coach. Donahue controlled Auburn football fortunes for 19 years, arriving at Auburn in 1904 and leaving for L.S.U. after the 1922 season. At one point during his career as head coach, Auburn played 23 games without a loss, a record which stood until the Shug Jordan era. The years that Donahue coached at Auburn are rightly called Auburn's first golden era in athletics, or at least in football.

I grew up in Lee County, Alabama, almost in sight of the spires of Samford Hall in the two decades following World War I. Being naturally attentive to the conversation of my elders, and especially attentive when the subject of the conversation was battles or football, I heard a lot about the Rainbow Division and the first golden era of Auburn Football under Donahue. The names and exploits of Donahue, Ducote, Newell, Shirey, Sherling, Bidez, Lawrence, and Moulton came to my attention from the overheard discussions. To name names is to slight the unnamed, and no slight is intended, and of course there were other names mentioned which failed to find a niche in my memory. Football may or may not teach character, but it incontestably teaches discipline and team work if the team has any success. These two virtues have been missing noticably in our recent

My own readings are broad rather than eclectic, and I have eagerly searched the writings of such authors as Bolton and Housel in the sport pages, John M. Higgins and Richard J. Reynolds, III, (see the Auburn Alumnews, February, 1981), and the writings of Pearson and Sanders in the Auburn Bulletin, pundits whose writings are like my readings, general rather than eclectic, for information on the famous line divide play employed by Donahue's teams. This play came to my attention within the last ten years. Bolton mentions the play prominently and quotes a discussion with

M.J. Donahue, Jr., son of Mike Donahue, concerning this great gridiron maneuver. Since learning of the existence of this play within the last ten years, I have searched the writings of the foregoing and other authors diligently for some hint as to what this maneuver actually was, and what it achieved. So far, all references to the Donahue maneuver have been silent as to what it actually did, when it was employed, and what the formation looked like.

Not only was the press silent as to this important maneuver, but former coaches, players, and other people who had more remote connections with the Auburn football team appeared to be equally in the dark. Discussions were held with Coach Jordan, and former Auburn football players, viz., Billy Hitchcock, Bobby Blake, George (Ripper) Williams, and the late Walter Gilbert, and with Yetta Samford, Jr., whose father, Yetta Samford, Sr., played on the Auburn football team under Coach Donahue, in an effort to pull back the curtain of obscurity which had fallen over this gridiron tactic. The results of these efforts were negative, and none of the foregoing authorities were able to illuminate the matter. Surely the line divide play was deserving of as much remembrance, and occasional employment, as the statue of liberty, the hidden ball, and the sleeper plays. Not being willing to see this play relegated to the attic of outmoded and obsolete stratagems, I determined to conduct my own investigation into the matter and penetrate the mystery which surrounded a maneuver, so well known in Auburn's first golden era, and which is said to have produced remarkable results.

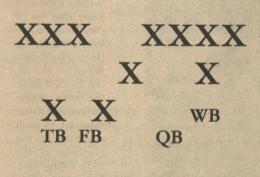

Seldom has an investigation been prosecuted with such thoroughness and perseverance. Inquiries were made concerning dusty storage files transferred from the unpaved, unfloored dungeon-like basement of Alumni Gym to other more modern facilities. Parties at distant points were interrogated; and the morgue of the Opelika-Auburn News was searched for any clues leading to disclosure of particulars of this tactical maneuver.

Seldom has an investigation resulted in such complete success. The play can now be diagramed, and its function and use completely understood.

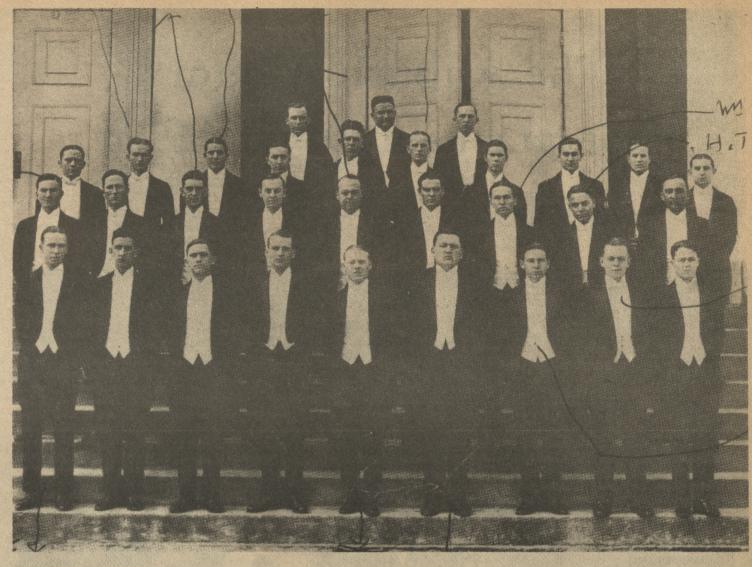

Credit must be given to Coach Jordan, Billy Hitchcock, Ripper Williams, Bobby Blake, Yetta Samford, Square Salter, and the legion of other parties interested in Auburn football who encouraged the author in his investigative efforts. Without such encouragement and support, the long and arduous investigative task would have been abandoned far short of success. Square Salter, an encyclopedia of information about Auburn football, gave the author the name of Charlie Gibson, a former Auburn quarterback who had played on the 1922 team under Donahue. Communication was established with Mr. Gibson who now resides in LaGrange, Georgia, and he supplied the diagram of the play. Judge Ira Weissinger and I visited with Charlie Gibson. Our visit with Mr. Gibson was most pleasant and entertaining, as well as informative. Mr. Gibson's athletic career at Auburn was prior to the era in which athletic scholarships were awarded to football players, and the athletes frequently worked their way through school. Mr. Gibson was given room and board by the SAE Fraternity, and along with Slick Moulton waited on tables at the fraternity house in return. Most of the information supplied by Mr. Gibson describing his career at Auburn, which ended with the 1922 season, is covered by Clyde Bolton in his book War Eagle and reference is given to this source of information without further comment to avoid copyright infringement. One story of a somewhat humorous nature, not mentioned in Bolton's book for some reason, needs repeating. In the Army game of 1922, an All-Southern Auburn tackle was being well handled by the Army men resulting in Gibson having to make a number of tackles from his position as halfback in the Auburn secondary. Gibson relates that he approached the tackle from the rear, kicking him in the part of the trousers which is not supposed to make very much contact with the ground during a football game, telling the tackle to either stop the Army ball carrier or get out of the way so that Gibson would not have to tackle both the Auburn tackle and the Army ball carrier. This, according to Mr. Gibson, had the desired effect, and on the next play the All-Southern nominee broke through the Army line, knocking the interference in several different directions, horse collaring the ball carrier for a substantial loss. The tackle is later said to have told Coach Donahue that Gibson was the meanest little man that he had ever seen. His weight while playing at Auburn was 146. Gibson was starting catcher on the Auburn baseball team, also coached by Donahue.

A copy of the diagram of the line divide play as furnished by Mr. Gibson is attached to this letter. Bolton states that the backfield lined up for the line divide play in an I formation. Evidently they shifted into a single wing formation prior to the snap of the ball, because this is the formation shown by Mr. Gibson. A glance at the diagram of the play will immediately cause students of the game to ask the reason for the absence of defensive players in the diagram. This was the first question that I addressed to Mr. Gibson. Parenthetically he said all teams, including Auburn, in those days, at least in the South, all schools had limited funds in the slender athletic budgets for scouting. As a consequence, the play was seen so infrequently that the defensive teams seldom employed the same defensive alignment for the play two times in succession. The quarterback lined up in the gap left by the "divide" to block any

GLEE CLUB IDENTIFIED—Both Teddy R. Bankson '26 of Mentone and Richard H. Cobbs, III, '25 of Andalusia wrote The Alumnews to point out that the picture of the Glee Club sent to us by Dr. Don Cathcart '25 of Atlanta is identified in the 1924 Glomerata. Back row: Teddy Bankson, J.W. Sparks, and R.L. Simpson, Jr. The third row: T.W. Jones, R.D. Yarbrough, C.A. Pruitt, F.J. Almgren, W.G. Wooten, F.E. Russey, W.H. Francis, Paul Fontille, S.C. Zeigler, F.B. Haley. Second row: S.R. Foy, G.A. Orum, F.G. Crow, B.H. Swango, H.S. Drake, T.W. Crump, Wm. McCormick, H.M. Tyler, B.F. Ponder. First row: F.H. Boyd, R.E. Johnson, Burgoyne, M.M. defensive player who might have ideas of shooting the gap and breaking up the play. Frequently the defensive alignment to the play would result in two defensive players being in front of the Auburn center and the offensive linemen on each side of the center on the weak side of the line divide. If such circumstances developed, the quarterback would frequently jump in behind the center and take the ball, and using the three on two blocking advantage, make four or five yards every time the play was run. Plays were not called from a huddle, but were called after lining up for scrimmage. The number of the ball carrier and the number of the hole through which he would carry the ball was selected according to whatever advantage resulted from the defensive alignment made to this unusual formation. The uniqueness of the formation, the infrequency with which the defense was called on to defend against it, created a surprise element which often enabled Auburn to score a touchdown or make a first down when a touchdown or first down was desperately needed. With apology to the professors of freshman English at Auburn, the play was probably designed to bumfuzzle the defense.

And now having reached back in the past to recover this maneuver which loomed so large in Southern fooball, I think that I can speak for the Athletic Department at Auburn, and for all loyal Auburn supporters in saying to the NCAA that our files are an open book on this important maneuver. In fact we challenge the NCAA to find some illegality concerning this play. It is true that the authorities outlawed place kicking the ball off of a helmet after Ducote had kicked his game winning field goal in this manner against Georgia. But Auburn people do not believe that even the hint of illegality can be directed toward the line divide play. They believe that the results of the games in Auburn's first golden era under Mike Donahue are safely in the record books and cannot be disturbed by any action of the NCAA, however arbitrary and capricious.

Auburn in the Donahue era is said to have been a small, provincial, and insulated community. The town is said to have lived and died with the success or lack of success of the football team. While conceding the possibility of this being true, the plus side of the ledger shows the development of a rare distillation of intangible ether known as the Auburn Spirit, characterized by friendliness, self-confidence, and loyalty. If this spirit did not first appear on the Auburn campus in the Donahue era, it was certainly enlarged during those golden years. Those of us who have become Auburn supporters in the years following can afford to pause and raise a toast with cheers and War Eagles for the contribution made by Donahue, Charlie Gibson, and the other Donahue men who wore the orange and blue, and who have left us a heritage of which we are justifiably proud.

> Yours sincerely, John S. Glenn '47

A Discussion About Auburn

Recently, I had the opportunity to enter into a discussion with two professors employed by Auburn University. The discussion, initiated by them, centered on their feelings about Auburn University and what they thought their future at the institution would be. The entire discussion on the professors' part was of a totally negative nature, and it was obvious that the only thing that was important to them was the amount of salary they were being paid. It was pointed out by both that "Auburn people" cared more about athletics than academics, and a reference was made concerning Coach Pat Dye's income and about the money spent on the enlarging of Jordan-Hare Stadium.

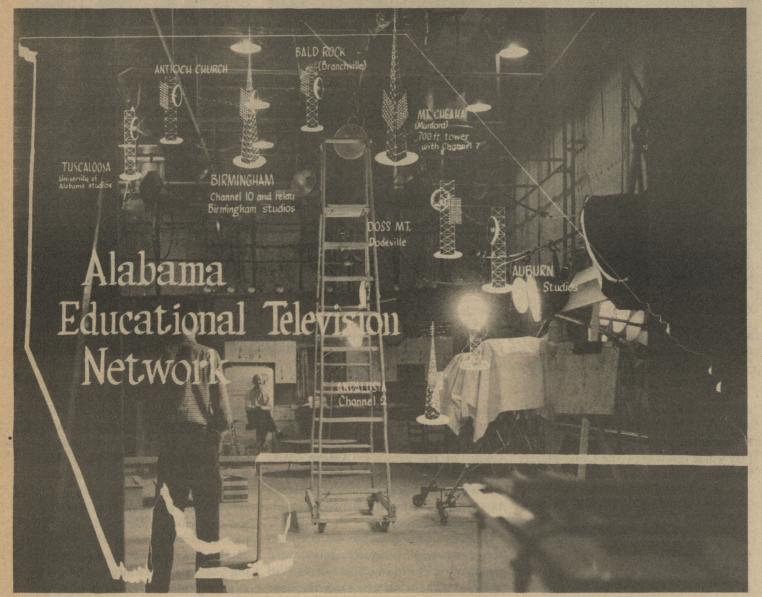

Quite frankly, I was shocked by their attitude. It was hard for me to realize that the attitude of the faculty had changed so much from the time when I was a student to what it is now. Anytime any employee loses his loyalty and abandons his commitment to his institution, it is time he recommits himself or, for the best of all concerned, he should move on to what he thinks is greener pastures. Unless this is done, everyone maintains a bad attitude and the big losers are the students. We cannot afford to allow our students to lose.

Everyone must realize the following facts:

- 1. When Dr. Hanly Funderburk was chosen Auburn University's new president, Auburn University was suffering many, many problems, the least of which was the money shortage.
- 2. Many new fine individuals have been appointed to Auburn University's Board of Trustees. For the first time in many years, we are witnessing the Board of Trustees becoming very familiar with the problems at Auburn University, a Board of Trustees working together, a Board of Trustees giving leadership, and a Board of Trustees

HIGH SCORER—Sophomore Bill McGriff, a business administration major from Pisgah, was high scorer for the 1955-56 basketball squad, tallying 30 points in one game. On the floor with him were captain Jim O'Donnell, Auburn's all-time scoring leader; Jim Diamond, alternate captain; and stalwarts such as Kay Slayden, Brownier Nelson, and Henry Sturkie, who was chosen captain of the '56-'57 team.

PIONEER—On October 3, 1955, Auburn began operating its educational television studio. Alabama had one of the first educational television networks in the U.S., and Auburn, along with the University of Alabama, had programming studios. By January, 1956, Auburn ETV was producing eight hours of live television shows per week under the direction of Ed Wegener. The variety of programs ranged from AETV's first college course—The Civil War and Reconstruction taught by Dr. Joseph Harrison—to Alabama Farm Facts, which included the weather report.

FOB—Number 23 in this unidentified game shot out of the files of the Auburn University Archives is Fob James When he was off the football field, the future governor could be found involved in such activities as the planning of the 1956 Village Fair. Can anyone identify the other Auburn team members and tell us what game this was?

CENTENNIAL—In November, 1956, Auburn celebrated the one-hundredth anniversary of its chartering with a pageant depicting the events of Auburn's founding. The group above represents the laying of the cornerstone for the first building of East Alabama Male College on August 12, 1857. Participants were members of Auburn's Masonic Lodge of 1956.

LIBERATED MEN?—Can anyone tell us who these folk are and what they are doing? We assume they are members of a tailoring class in the mid-Fifties.

BOTANY—Students use microscopes to examine specimens which Dr. Donald E. Davis, professor of botany (standing), has just discussed. In 1956, the Department of Botany and Plant Pathology offered master's and doctoral degrees as well as undergraduate. Can anyone identify the trio so absorbed with their microscopes?

Alumni, Faculty Continue Gifts To RBD Library

Over the summer, Auburn faculty and alumni have continued to make gifts to Ralph Brown Draughon Library. Because of inflation and severe budget restrictions, the library has suffered during the past year. Currently the library continues to welcome gifts of money and of books. Gifts can be made through the Auburn Annual Giving Program and designated to the library or made directly to the library.

Gifts may be designated to buy books in a particular subject area or to subscribe to periodicals.

COEDS IN ENGINEERING?—When we ran this picture and suggested that this was a 1939 Ford chassis, we heard from the old car affectionados out there. "The engine is a 6 cylinder flat head, the likes of which never graced the assembly line of a Ford factory," wrote John T. Kaetz, Jr., '48 of Bessemer. Jack H. Hartzog '49 of Jacksonville, Ark., agreed and added further details. "The chassis has coil springs which Ford did not use until 1949. I believe the frame is that of either a General Motors product (which if true would identify the chassis as either a Pontiac or Oldsmobile because they were the only two GM cars to use this type of engine in 1939) or a Chrysler Corp. product—Plymouth, Dodge, Desota or Chrysler all had the type of engine shown in the photograph." He voted for Chrysler and Mr. Kaetz also suggested that the car is of "Chrysler ancestry." Mr. Hartzog pointed out that the gearshift lever is located on the steering column which Ford didn't have until 1940. He suggested that if the hubcap was clearer, it would be easier to tell what kind of car is pictured. Any other suggestions? We'd all like to know. And, does anyone know who the coeds are?

Letter to Editor

making tough decisions for a better Auburn University.

3. A large University can have quality and excel in both academics and athletics—with both working together to help the other. A newly-published book, Presidents Can't Punt, does an excellent job of illustrating how this can work well. The facts show that alumni are more generous in financial giving when the athletic situation at a university is very competitive. This has occurred at Auburn University when money for Auburn's new music building was donated to Auburn University by a generous alumni during a happy moment at an Auburn football game.

4. The Auburn Athletic Department, through the efforts of the Auburn Athletic Program, generates its own money. The stadium renovation was completed by refinancing the stadium bond issue and the bonds are paid for by revenues generated from football games and not monies from academic programs.

Futhermore, in my opinion, the financial conditions in America and at Auburn University will continue to be very tight for another two or three years. People who depend on Auburn University for a living better realize this and know that raises are possibly going to be limited. With this information, employees must make decisions which, of course, could be adjusting their lifestyles—seeking additional income through part-time employment or leaving Auburn University altogether. No matter what decision is made, the decision should be made in a positive way without the crying attitude we are witnessing.

Dr. Funderburk has the experience and the leadership ability to bring Auburn University to great academic achievements. In fact, he has been laying the groundwork. It can only be accomplished with everyone's help, cooperation, and patience. Hopefully, we will all realize this and make the commitment together to do our part in following his leadership along with the leadership of our Board of Trustees.

Yours for a Greater Auburn,

Ron Creel, Member State Board of Education

Auburn's first night game, September 19

Football Roundup-

AU Opens With Win

By Sam Hendrix

The Pat Dye Era began successfully on a blistering September Saturday as Auburn, before 48,000 in Jordan-Hare Stadium, took a hard-fought 24-16 win over inspired Texas Christian.

"It wasn't pretty, but we won," Dye told the press corps afterwards. "We made a lot of mistakes but we played a lot of people."

Auburn made the usual first game mistakes and sent murmurs through the crowd early when senior quarterback Charles Thomas fumbled on the second play from scrimmage. But as a sports writer wrote long ago, "You can call 'em Tigers again."

Game number one was what most of the crowd expected, plus a little. The Tigers ran their new wishbone well, grinding out 212 yards, but also threw 20 passes, completing six for 117 yards. Also Auburn used a no-huddle offense effectively, and gave good evidence of instilled discipline.

There was discipline on defense, too. Auburn allowed 210 yards passing, but faced 28 tosses by Steve Stamp, the premier quarterback of the Southwest Conference, and a receiver named Stanley Washington, an All-America candidate who reminded the 48,000 of a man named Beasley a decade earlier.

Against the run the Tiger defense was not so generous, allowing 144 yards, 80 of which came on one play. That run aside, TCU managed only 64 yards on 42 carries.

And talk about hitting. It had been a while since Jordan-Hare saw licks like the 1981 Auburn defense administered.

The Horned Frogs scored first, converting the early Thomas fumble into a field goal. Moments later Auburn grabbed the lead on a one-yard plunge by freshman Ron O'Neal, a 5'10, 245 lb. fullback who gained 75 impressive yards on 11 carries in the first half before leaving the game with leg cramps early in the third quarter.

Another big play by a freshman, a blocked punt by David King, set up Auburn's second score. Joe Sullivan led a 67-yard march which ended with O'Neal bowling over three defenders on a fourth-and-three play for a 25-yard ramble to the end zone. 14-3.

On the first play after the kickoff, TCU's Marcus Gilbert dodged his way 80 yards to make it 14-10. The Tigers increased their lead again shortly before the half when Thomas and Chris Woods teamed for a six-yard score.

Gilbert brought the Frogs to within five points—21-16—with a TD run in the third period, but TCU got no closer. Al Del Greco, who kicked extra points after Auburn's three touchdowns, drilled a 24-yard field goal early in the fourth quarter to complete the scoring.

The season opener left a number of questions unanswered—consistency on offense, the defensive secondary, performances by freshmen and first-time starters. But the open date the following weekend gave Dye two weeks to iron out the wrinkles and have his team ready for Wake Forest.

Wake Forest 24 AU 21

Auburn's first-ever night game may best be described as a nightmare.

Wake Forest, sporting a passing attack which resembled missile warfare, invaded Jordan-Hare Stadium Sept. 19 and stunned 63,000 fans with a come-from-behind 24-21 win over the 10-point favorite Tigers.

Deacon quarterbacks Gary Schofield and Dick Webber completed 32 of 46 passes for 265 yards and three touchdowns, including the clincher with just over four minutes to play, to lead the upset. Most of the yards were gained on short routes to tight ends and backs, but a practically nonexistent AU pass rush allowed the passers plenty of time to spot open receivers.

Coach Pat Dye noted a lack of continuity in Auburn's offense, but said he is "not willing to give up on the young team."

"We must be fundamentally sound to have a chance against anybody since we don't have enough talent," Dye said. He also blamed the loss on the coaching staff.

Auburn got off to a great start, leading 14-0 barely into the second quarter. The scores came on 54 and 47 yard gallops by fullbacks Ron O'Neal and George Peoples. The plays were identical with the runners breaking through the line and racing untouched to the end zone. Al Del Greco added both PATs.

The Deacons grabbed the momentum late in the half. After twice being denied upon having first-and-goal situations, Wake Forest closed the gap to 14-3 with a field goal 33 seconds before halftime. Auburn freshman Clayton Beauford fumbled the ensuing kickoff, and Wake Forest recovered and had a TD pass with two seconds left to trail 14-10 at the half.

A third quarter touchdown pass gave Wake Forest its first lead of the game, 17-14. Auburn came right back, driving 80 yards in five plays to go on top 21-17 when senior quarterback Charles Thomas ran over from one yard.

A pair of face mask penalties against the Tigers aided the Deacons in their final drive, a 79-yard march which ended with split end Wayne Baumgardner catching Schofield's four yard scoring toss.

Auburn had two chances late, but a fumble by Thomas at the Wake Forest 37 yard line and a pass interception with 1:20 left sealed the upset.

Two bright spots for the Tigers: O'Neal, the freshman from Atlanta, gained 120 yards on just 14 carries, and no serious injuries were sustained in the Wake Forest game, giving Auburn a healthy roster for the tough road ahead, Tennessee at Knoxville.

Tennessee 10 Auburn 7

Against Tennessee, Auburn learned the hard way that rebuilding a football power takes time. It took the allotted 60 minutes; Auburn needed 61.

Playing before almost 93,000 very loud Volunteer fans, the Tigers, behind freshman quarterback Ken Hobby, had the ball at their 20 trailing 10-7 with 5:16 to play. Five minutes and 76 yards later, Auburn had third down and no timeouts.

Then "one of those things" happened. Hobby dropped the ball. The freshman fell on it but was forced to watch as the final seconds become history. Mistakes cost the Tigers earlier, too, as confusion along the sidelines forced head coach Pat Dye to use the final timeout.

"We didn't lose," Dye said about the game. "Time just ran out on us. The people representing Auburn in Neyland Stadium today showed a lot of class, a lot of guts and a lot of courage. If they keep playing that way, we will build a foundation we can live on for a long time at Auburn."

Tennessee scored first on an opening drive field goal. The drive was aided on a punt in which Auburn had too many players on the field. Auburn took the lead on the first play of the second quarter when senior Charles Thomas rifled a 47-yard scoring pass to Mike Edwards. Al Del Greco added the PAT.

The Vols took the halftime lead and closed the scoring with Steve Alatorre's run on a fourth-and-one.

The second half was typical Auburn-

IT WAS A SURPRISE—Despite all odds, members of the Spaceport Auburn Club managed to keep the special honoring of B. J. (Jack) Dryer 43 a secret. When Jack and Helen turned up for what they thought was a regular club meeting, they found out they were the honorees. Both Jack and Helen retired from NASA in June. Jack organized the Spaceport Auburn group 16 years ago. Pictured with the Dryers is Leslie Hamby, right, who represented the Auburn Alumni Association.

Tennessee rough stuff. Neither squad could sustain any offense as the defenses took over. Tennessee did have a punt return TD nullified because of clipping.

The Tigers' record stood at 1-2 prior to the following week's trip to Lincoln to face Nebraska.

Nebraska 17 Auburn 3

Auburn's third straight loss, a 17-3 decision to Nebraska in Lincoln, was the result of the Tigers being their own worst enemies. Auburn lost five of 10 fumbles, two at the four and nine yard lines which led directly to Nebraska touchdowns, and had two passes intercepted to seal its defeat.

But shining through the rain and the cold on that dreary Mid western fall Saturday was a defense which time and again frustrated the powerful Cornhusker offense. Averaging more than 400 yards per game, Nebraska amassed only 257 yards rushing and another 50 passing against Auburn's courageous defenders. Tiger linemen sacked the quarterback three times and freshman sideback David King picked off two Nebraska aerials. Twice Nebraska faced fourth and short and was stopped.

The story of this game, however, was crucial fumbling by the Tigers' outmanned offense. A Charles Thomas fumble at the four and a Lionel James fumble at the nine set up both of the Cornhuskers' touchdowns. And another Thomas fumble at the Nebraska 30 stopped what appeared to be a drive toward a tying score late in the game.

Despite controlling the ball for only 10 minutes during the first half, Auburn held a 3-0 lead at halftime thanks to a 52-yard field goal by Al Del Greco on the Tigers' first possession. But the two fumbles which aided Nebraska, plus a Cornhusker field goal in the third quarter, allowed the Big Eight Conference school to come back and win the game.

Coach Pat Dye summed up the performance by saying that the defense kept the Tigers in the game. "Defense and the kicking game kept us close but offensively we took ourselves right out of contention," said Dye. "Öffensively we just got manhandled," he said of the 150-yard total output.

Track Freshmen Fantastic Five

They may not be the "Magnificent Seven," but Mike Muska, Auburn cross-country coach, will be happy to settle for what he calls the "Fantastic Five." Jay O'Keefe, Scott Bagley, Jim Ailshie, Keith Chisler, and Joe Buechler are Muska's prize freshmen who he believes holds the keys to Auburn's future greatness in cross-country. They come from different states, but they share a common bond—a great love of track and a great ability in their chosen sport.

Included in the group are high school All-America's, state champions, a premier marathon runner and an athlete considered to be the nation's best high school miler last year.

O'Keefe, younger brother of Auburn's two-time SEC runner Kevin O'Keefe, is Connecticut's state champion. He also earned high school All-American honors two consecutive seasons.

Bagley, a native of New York, comes to Auburn as one of the top marathoners in the nation. His most impressive showing over 26 miles was a 2:28.0 last season, and in recent workouts at Auburn, he's covered six miles in 31 minutes.

Ailshie was the best high school miler in the nation last year. He was a member of this summer's U.S. Jr. National Team and has earned All-America, All-State and All-Region honors.

Chisler is Alabama's contribution to Muska's "Fantastic Five." He was the state's two-mile champion with a time of just over nine minutes. The Huntsville runner says his ambition in life is "to achieve success to its fullest potential."

Buechler is Kentucky's two-time state champion. He has also earned All-America honors, and Muska considered him the finest high school cross-country runner in the Southeast last year.

"I feel that we have completed one of the best recruiting years in the school's history," said Muska, "and I'll be counting on these five to contribute.

"Their success will be measured more in terms of what they accomplish in the future at Auburn, rather than how much they might help up this season," he added.

Lady Swimmer Sees World, Wins Meets

Tours of the Red Square and the Kremlin were nice, but seeing police on daily guard with machine guns in hand brought a sense of perspective into the life of Annie Lett, Auburn's All-America swimmer.

"When we were in Kiev and Moscow, police were guarding our compound around the clock," said Annie. "The sight was scary and it made me proud that I live in this country and not over there."

Russian friends could be made only one way, and that was through what the swimmers called the "black market." It was a system of tee-shirt, hat and clothing exchange, but nothing that resembled exchanges on a personal level.

But Annie didn't allow the reality of American-Russian political differences on the outside to affect what she had to do on the inside where it counted. In the pool she cut the water as quickly as a bullet would have cut the night. The Bartow, Fla., native placed second in the 100 freestyle in 57.3 while also swimming the third leg of America's winning 400 freestyle relay team.

Prior to the Russian trip, Annie had stopovers in Romania for the World Student Games and in Milwaukee for the U.S. Nationals. Despite her second place finish in Kiev, Annie's finest summer show was saved for the "home" audience gathered in Milwaukee, where she swam the 100 freestyle in 57.6 for the third best time by a woman in this country.

Annie had the honor of being the only female swimmer from the SEC to make the trips to Europe, and she began her tour in style by earning a gold medal on America's winning 400 freestyle relay team in the World Student Games in Bucharest.

Back home at Auburn this fall, the sophomore heads a group of six returning Auburn All-America's, as the Lady Tigers try to dent the nation's top five for the first time this season. The team has jumped 14 places in the national standings in three years, finishing seventh at last season's AIAW Nationals.

Alumni Trips For 1982

For those of you who want to include trips with other Auburn alumni in your vacation plans for next year, here's advance notice. In 1982 the Auburn Alumni Association will be sponsoring trips to the Orient and to Germany.

Annie Lett

The Orient trip, March 4-24, will include Tokyo, mainland China, and Hong Kong.

The trip to Germany will be a direct flight from Atlanta to Frankfurt on July 23 and will conclude back in Atlanta on August 3. From Frankfurt, the group will cruise down the Main River to Munich with calls at ports along the way.

Additional information on the trips will be sent to alumni later in the year.

Mums for Alums

Mortar Board continues an Auburn tradition by offering "Alum Mums" for Homecoming '81. To make the mums especially appealing, Mortar Board will add the letters AU or the year graduated to the corsages, which can be ordered in yellow, bronze, or white.

Proceeds from the mum sales will support the academic scholarship which Mortar Board gives each year and which is dedicated this year to Dean Katharine Cater, a founder of Auburn's chapter.

To order an Alum Mum, write your name, address, mum color preference, and year graduated (optional) on a sheet of paper and mail with a check ($3.50 for each mum) payable to Mortar Board to Mortar Board, Cater Hall, Auburn University, Al 36849, before October 28. Those who order mums can pick them up in front of the Union Building from 9:00 a.m. until 12:00 noon on game day, November 7.

Upcoming Lectures

Two prominent lecturers will be on campus during the next month.

Dr. Joe B. Frantz, professor of history at the University of Texas, will present the first Draughon Lecture in Southern History for this year when he gives a personal profile of President Lyndon B. Johnson on October 22. The following day, he will discuss the "Dismantling of the Great Society."

Early in November, Daniel Boorstin, Librarian of Congress, will return to Auburn as the Franklin Lecturer in Science and Humanities. In the thirteen years of its existence, the Franklin Lecture Series, sponsored at Auburn by the John and Mary Franklin Foundation of Atlanta through the offices of Kelly Mosley '24, has brought many prominent scholars in both the sciences and the humanities to the Auburn campus. A previous Franklin lecturer, Dr. Boorstin will be on campus November 3-4 to meet with students and faculty and present a public lecture.

Alumni Association Annual Meeting To Be Held Homecoming

The Auburn Alumni Association will hold its annual meeting on the morning of Homecoming, November 7.

Business will include the election of a president of the Alumni Association and five new members of the Board of Directors. All members of the Alumni Association are urged to attend the meeting which will take place in room 213 of Foy Union Building 10 a.m.

EE To Host Open House

Electrical engineering students and faculty will host a department open house on Homecoming, November 7 for alumni, friends, and Auburn visitors. The open house, to be held in 204 Dunstan Hall, will begin at 9:30 and last until noon and will include refreshments and department tours.
